From Intersentia : The International Competition Network at Ten: Origins, Accomplishments and Aspirations before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The International Competition Network at Ten: Origins, Accomplishments and Aspirations:

Since its inception in 2001, the International Competition Network (ICN) has achieved remarkable results. Currently uniting 114 competition authorities from both developed and developing countries, the ICN has contributed significantly to the harmonization and convergence of global procedural and substantive antitrust law and policy. The ICN substantially contributes to increasing international cooperation in the field of cartels and to a more uniform treatment of anticompetitive unilateral conduct by dominant companies. Moreover, the ICN has stimulated competition authorities to streamline procedures and build up capacity, resources, and knowledge to adequately review mergers in a multi-jurisdictional environment. Written by leading competition agency officials, private sector lawyers, and academics, this publication brings together essays on the origins, accomplishments, and aspirations of the ICN. The analytical and critical contributions offer valuable insights into the functioning of the ICN, its accomplishments, its key-success factors, the obstacles it has faced, and possible future directions. As such, this collection offers a wealth of information and insights for private practitioners and competition agency officials, as well as government officials and academics.
