Responsiveness, Relationality:

This book analyzes the increasing use made by contemporary British governments of "contracts" to regulate a wide range of economic and social relationships. It provides a critical analysis of such contractual arrangements and evaluates their potential both to benefit the parties and to achieve the Government's regulatory objectives.

About the Author Peter Vincent-Jones (BA (Hons), Cambridge, 1973; MA, Sheffield, 1979; PhD, Sheffield, 1983) is Professor of Law at the University of Leeds. Over the past fifteen years he has developed particular expertise in the privatisation and contractualisation of public services in the UK. He has published extensively on contract, housing, and public management issues from a socio-legal perspective in a wide range of journals including the Modern Law, Oxford Journal of Legal Studies, Journal of Law and Society, Public Law, Legal Studies, Civil Justice Quarterly, Local Government Studies, and Public Administration. This monograph is the product of work undertaken during a three-year ESRC Research Fellowship awarded in 2001 to study 'The New Public Contracting in Socio-Legal Perspective'.
